For our presentation we presented our functional front-end website and the back-end database. All current features were present and functioned for the presentation on Mac and Windows, but unfortunately the common navigational elements did not display properly for Linux. This meant that we were unable to make much progress on auto-generating and scripting those elements and had to hard code them into each page on the site. Carl suggested that we meet with him during office hours so he could assist us in debugging the common elements. Carl also suggested that we consider the addition of user profiles and the ability to search for users for the project. We agreed that this would make a good stretch goal for the project. We also had some minor difficulties in getting the automatically generated search results to link to the project details page but were able to track down and resolve that issue prior to presenting.
